In a recent meeting the topics of the religion system were discussed which evolved into the discussion of player led organisations in general.

The structure of a religion and the effects it would have on the game environment could be viewed as a blueprint for several other systems with the goal of allowing players to unite for a shared goal.

In previous games in this system a similar circumstance was observed where players would form their own factions amongst each other however they were primarily through roleplay between each player. There should be an attempt to implement mechanisms in the game system which can support this process of player led organisations within the game world.

Starting a Faction

Players should be offered the ability to create a faction with a number of other players. There should be some requirements that must be met in order for a faction to be founded, a few elements that could be considered are:

- The player who is founding the faction, the faction leader, should at least be an overlord of a fief that could be considered the home of the factions business.
- There should be a group of players who form the founding members, a number of players to be decided.
- A collection of resources for the organisation, this could be NPC, resources or locations which are considered properties of the organisation.

Purpose of Organisation

Organisations should exist to advance the goals of the players in the world. This means that they serve to provide resources and boost the stature of involved members. Other considerations

- A guarantee of protection to those who exist within the faction, this could be through player led reinforcements or a collection of army NPCs which can be utilised.
- The power of an organisation would be directly associated with the position their faction leader holds within the realm and also the prominence of the faction itself. A faction which can name many of the noble houses amongst its rank should give a boost to stature greater than that of one which is made of journeymen. Similarly a faction which controls many fiefs within a region may have a greater boost to their members' stature in those regions.

Existing within a Faction

Membership within a faction should be paid into with a contribution of resources or gold periodically to keep the group thriving. An exact payment can be decided on a per-faction basis, examples:

- Members are required to transfer ownership to the faction.
- Members are required to pay a monthly tithe to the faction.

Special Factions

Within this system it could make sense that the matter of religious orders come under preset organisations such as The Church which would have access to its own special actions. This system would additionally allow the separation of different denominations to exist within the faction system.